LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

I'm so glad you finally get to see the results of all our hard work! This zine was a little less than 2 months in the making, although we'd kicked the idea of a server zine around a few months beforehand. I was really excited to help coordinate this, partly because I love making zines, and partly because it was a great exercise in letting go of my control freak tendencies.

I hope you have as much fun reading this as we had making it!

DREGA (@DREGADRAWNS)

SHE/HER

finally, sharga in her natural element, as a nautical nuisance :3
to my knowledge i've somehow never drawn an underwater scene before and the lighting was a neat challenge! red light is the most readily absorbed by seawater, so the deep cyan was balanced with filtered sunlight. this is also my first zine contribution, hopefully far from my last! thanks for putting this together ed!!

"What a calm, pretty, blue, loud ocean..."

In our swimsuits, we get to enjoy the full spectrum of joy and disaster right in front of one of nature's great forces; I hope my silly painting captures that! This is my first time participating in a zine. Thank you ed for organizing it!

ODIN HE/ THEY

theodinspire once collected someone who was wearing a full suit of armor from the airport; they were told to expect someone who looked like "Freddie Mercury but serious." When not at the gym, he can be found painting, programming, parenting or drinking boba.

Pacific Northwest beaches are my kind of summer beaches. Cool, foggy mornings lounging on giant rocks, exploring tide pools at low tide, and tip-toeing over the barnacle-covered sea floor. Digital painting over photograph.

HARLEYKLAWZ

SHE/HER

Hi y'all! I wanted to do a piece for my Sona that was just a nice representation of having visited my old fav beach of my childhood, while also expressing the fun bit of an old-school swimsuit mag or pinup in pose and demeanor. Only a lil suggestive. The rockface is based on the Dana Point headlands, and the little gag is featuring my wife's sona. A bit of a comic-gag is always fun to break up space I feel! The second is a more personal painting, featuring the humpback whales I saw all the time swimming in the pacific.

Balancing physique and fun describes both the guiding vision for this piece and my personal bodybuilding mantra. It's about showing off and feeling big, but also having fun and maybe looking cute.

A beautiful Seattle day is the perfect time for a crabcat to get out and show off its beach body. I only had a little time to take its picture before Crabstack scuttled back off under a rock.

As soon as Harley suggested “beach wrestling,” I knew what my piece was going to be. I usually stick to physical media, but I really wanted to create something impressive for this zine, so I challenged myself to go digital – kind of. Drega and I talked a while back about a way to do lines on paper, scan and threshold them, and then color digitally. So, really, you have everyone else to thank for this.

P.S.: Spot the Tuftie.
